

Cross-border Environmental Conflict and Cooperation (CECC)

2nd Annual International Conference

Bridging the Gap

Environmental ideas that have been crystalizing in the last five decades are now coming to a turning point. The accumulation of scholarly work on the environment spans natural sciences, organizations, and policies. There are a variety of components, but often insufficient connections and shared language. We aim in this conference to do the work of weaving some of these components together. In particular, we believe that the social sciences and the humanities have a lot to offer for this process of weaving and therefore need to take their place and contribute to integrating environmental knowledge into societal rituals, practices, and identity.

How do we connect different organizational fields to shared environmental ideas?

How do actors and researchers create a coherent environmental language?

How do policies connect to goals and needs in diverse local social and cultural environments?

How do we weave a shared narrative of sustainability in different contexts?

How can “old traditions” help weave new science-informed policies into the social fabric?

The 2-day conference will focus on connecting the dots in a fragmented environmental field, and will be held
